Mr. Morgan Concludes His Speech on the Elections Bill and Refers to the Proposed Cloture Rule-A Presidential Vete-Nominations To-Day.

In the Senate to-day Mr. Edmunds asked unanimous consent for the passage of a joint resolution extending until July 1, 1891, the period during which the law of a joint resolution extending until July 1, 1891, the period during which the laws of Nebraska shall be in force in the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. Edmunds explained that the actereating the Territory placed over it the laws of Nebraska until the close of the first session of the Territorial Legislature would enact a code of laws, but it had failed to do so, and the term of the service would expire to-day. If Congress failed to act now, the Territory would be in a state of class.

Mr. Morgan inquired the reason of the chaotic condition of the Legislature. Mr. Edmunds replied that there was no good reason. He helieved it to be due to the flagrant negligence of duty of the persons composing that body.

Mr. Morgan said he understood the whole trouble grew out of a squabble about the seat of government. It was a following out of the policy under which the Territorial government had been inaugurated. He objected to the consideration of the resolution, and it was haid over.

Mr. Hale intreduced a joint resolution to provide for the floating of American flags on the east and west portices of the Capitol every day in the year.

He said that his tention go American flags on the east and west porticos of the Capitol every day in the year.

Mr. Sherman contended that it was not now in order to call up that resolution, except epon formal motion.

Mr. Morgan said that during his four-teen years' service in the Senate the other practice had been in vogue.

He likened the present condition of the Senate to the condition of sycophantic Damocles with a single hair holding the sword suspended over his head. Yesterday the little State of Rhode Island had supported the sword over the Senate day the little State of Rhode Island had suspended the sword over the Senate-over the great States of Massachusetts, Ohio and New York. Rhode Island had informed the Senate that at the will and pleasure—not of the proper committee, but of a caucus committee, free speech was to be prohibited. But these threats were not addressed to sycophants or cowards, but to men "who knew their rights, and knowing, dare maintain."

When Mr. Morgan concluded his remarks Mr. McPherson took the floor and finished his speech on the Elections bill.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO.

Bar Harbor, Secretary Blaine's Home Cannot Have a New Postoffice. Just before the Senate adjourned this afternoon a message was received from the President. This was a veto of the bill the President. This was a veto of the bill recently passed providing for a postoffice building at Bar Harbor. The President gave as his reason for returning without his approval the bill in question that the public needs did not justify the expenditure of $75,000 for such a purpose.

Bar Harbor is a small place, having a population of less than 2,000, but secretary Blaine and Congressman Milliken can never be convinced that Bar Harbor is not entitled to a public building.

The veto is generally regarded as a slap in the face for the premier.

Nominations To-Day. The President sent to the Senate to-day the following nominations:

The Boston Highwayman in Action. "Pause!" sternly commanded the footpad, pointing a loaded revolver at the head of the belated pedestrian. "Suspend progress immediately, or with the index member of the digital extremities of my dexter manipulatory organ I communicate motion to the metallic lever on the nether side of this weapon and release the mechanism it holds in check, thereby permitting the resultant concussion to explode the detonating fulminate contained in the rearward portion of the cartridge, vaporize the combined product of nitrate of potash, sulphur and pulverized carbon with which it is in immediate contact, and impart a sudden propelling impulse to the clongated leaden projectile to secure the propulsion of which with adequate velocity this mechanical device originally was brought into the sphere of action."

"What do you want?" gasped the astonished victim.

"The immediate transfer and surrender of whatever auriforous or argentiferous disks coined for purposes of exchange or printed notes exchangeable for such disks of which you may by any fortuitous concatenation of circumstances be the possessor, together with such other articles of intrinsic value or capable of being hypothecated for the necessary means of subsistence as may have found a temporary lodgment in your garments. Nothing of a nutritious or alimentary nature has passed my lips for twenty-four hours," he added, with a smothered sob. "The exigencies of my financial situation leave me no other resource than to take these imperative measures. Extrude the impedimenta or the crepitation will eventuate at once." shed victim

"Is it something to eat you want?"
"That is the summen bonum of my ambition—the ne plus ultra of my hopes."

From a basket on his arm the belated traveler took out a cylindrical package. He gave it to the footpad, who held it up where the flickering rays of a dim street lamp fell upon it, gave one glance at the printed label, shrieked deliriously and fainted for joy.

It was a can of baked beans.

"Falstaff," Verdi's New Opera.

Verdi has written, or rather has partly written, and is busy finishing a new opera, and it is not a tragedy at all, but a comic opera entitled "Falstaff," the libretto being the work of Signor Boito. It will be interesting to read some passages from the statement now put forth: The mastro has on many occasions of late years expressed to intimate friends his desire to write a comic opera, but he was restrained by the almost insurmountable difficulty of finding a subject of brilliantcomicality.

We know for a fact that Verdi had read all the Italian and French comic writers without finding a subject that fully satisfied him. Whilst Verdi was at Milan in the summer of 1889 and speaking with Arrigo Boito on the subject of comic opera Boito seized the opportunity, and not only proposed to Verdi a subject, but with marvellous rapidity he, in a few hours almost, sketched out and presented to the mestro an outline. "Falstaff," drawing this typical character from the various comedies and dramas in which Shakespeare has introduced him.

The proposal pleased Verdi; but he plainly told Boito that he would accept the new libretto only on condition that it should not hinder him from any other work, for (said he) I do not wish to have the remorseful consciousness of having retarded by an hour the completion of your "Nerone." Satisfied by Boito's assurances, Verdi accepted the libretto, and in the course of last spring, during a stay at Nervi, Boito wrote a great part of the libretto. This has since been entirely completed, and Verdi has up to the present time completed about one-haif of the opera.

"Falstaff" is a lyric comedy in three acts and five scenes; the characters are numerous and important. We do not know where Verdi will decide to have his new opera performed, as he has repeatedly declared that he began the work simply for his own amusement, not knowing when or whether he should ever finish it. Any particulars about the date or place of performance are therefore incorrect.

The Duke d'Auxy.

From the New York World.

When the laudlord of the Pavilion Hotel on Staten/Island secured the Duke When the landlord of the Pavilion Hotel on States Island secured the Duke of Auxy as a boarder last spring he was filled with pride. The Duke and his family and retinue gave the hotel an aristocratic air which must have been worth at least 850 per week as a mere advertisement. But, alast the losel churl of a landlord is now suing the Duke before a common Staten Island justice of the peace for the remnant of a board bill. The Duke was charged extra for meals served in the seclusion of his apartments. He protested and refused to pay. His trunks were seized. He gave a check for the disputed amount, secured his baggare and then stopped the payment of the check. Hence the proceedings. Now, a landlord who boards Dukes ought to know that genuine aristocrais cannot always be expected to deed in public. It is not aristocratic to dine at the table of hote.

When a landlord receives noblemen under his roof he should know that the European rale is to make no extra charge for meals served in rooms. When the nobleman bearing the rank of a Duke stops in a plain hotel his presence is an offset to all charges for extras. The simple Staten Islanders who are pursuing the Duke d'Auxy are evidently not posted on the international courtesies due the nobility. Here in New York many of our inn-keepers have boarded Counts, Dukes and even Barons for indefinite periods without the siightest compensation other than the "tone" imparted to their respective hostelries by the fur-lined overcoats of the functious guests.

AN IDEAL WOMAN. The Qualities Men Like Best in the Op

From the Acie Fork Sun Here is a man's idea of what the per-fect woman should be for some sweet girl to cut out and paste in her scrap book:

First of all, because he is a man, he insists that the perfect woman shall always be well dressed, in as much taste as the silly fashion of the day will allow, and in such a way as "to set off her beauty when she is young, to make her seem still beautiful when she is past her youth and to hide the ravages of time when she is old."

Next she must know something about art of all kinds—art in painting, sculpture, poetry, literature, music, and must have trained her eye so that she knows good work and is not carried away with shams and humbugs.

Above all she must be sympathotic and not talk so as to show how clever she is, but to bring out the best points of the man she is talking to.

She must be intelligent and gracious, as well as sympathetic, and always a woman's woman, of whom other women think and speak well.

She must love everything that is beautiful and good, and hate everything that is coarse and ugly.

And the man who has set forth this comprehensive little gospel of woman-hood, which every girl would do well to read, mark and inwardly digest, is none other than Walter Besant.

Ruskin gives dressing, also, as one of the three cardinal virtues which every womanly woman must possess, and says that women should always "dress beautiful, not finely, unless on occasion, and then very linely and beautifully, too." It would appear that, in consideration of refilm by right divine, and lose something of their high prerogative when their robes of state are shabby and crumpled. girl to cut out and paste in her scrap book: First of all, because he is a man, he in-these November days. The men are dressed much like the huntsmen I have described and are splendidly mounted. The women wear exceedingly nobby costumes in the way of riding habits, each selecting the color which best suits her taste. As a rule they are very reckless riders, and it is the common chat of every circle that they will take as many chances, if not more, than the men. They enter into the sport with great spirit, and rarely hesitate to take any jump in their road. For each person in the chase there is what is called a second horseman—light riders from the stables, dressed like the "whippers in"—and they follow the hunt, saving their horses as much as possible, so that those who are engaged in the chase may have a fresh animal if their horse tires or is run down.

Hundreds watch as the stag hounds rush after the deer, and those who are in at the death are the honored of the day. Farce, as all this may seem, it is a scene well worth looking upon, if but for once. Of course the people who follow the Queen's hounds belong to the aristocracy, although now and then a rich American is invited to take part, but neither our men nor women come to accept this hospitality. They do not like the hazards of the sport, and it is altogether too much trouble and work for an American to enjoy.

Lessons From the Army.

Lessons From the Army.

William Dean Howells, in the Filtor's Study in Harper's Megazine for January.

In the Army, with its yagae and few In the Army, with its vagde and few and distant rewards, there may be and there are rivalries in devotion and daring, but there is no competition for place and money as there is in civil life, and yet the soldiers' ideal being duty, the performance of duty seems sufficient. It is a state of things which can suggest much to those who are fond of ballling the hope of better things in us with the assertion that it is contrary to human nature to act from any but interested and selfish motives. Human nature is a great mystery, and we have not yet begun to solve it; but it appears that a number of men drawn at random from society and trained to a belief in duty as the chief good, will keep on not only living it but dying it. We civilians talk much, we almost talk solely of our rights, but in the Army it seems that amen talk chiefly of their duties, when they talk at all, and never of their rights. These things are true of all ranks; the ideal is the same from the private to the general, and it seems to correct all the mistaken tendencies of the time before they became soldiers.

If, as Ruskin has fancied, the army should ever serve us as the morn of the civil state, and we should come to have "soldiers of the sword," it might not be long before we should be told that it was against human nature to act selishly, and that to be recreant to the general welfare in any aim or deed was to be guilty of conduct unbeschming a citizen and a gentleman. However this may be, it is certain and it is significant that those who have attempted to dream out a four brighter than this present have always had something like a military organization in their eyes, but these visionaries have somehow beheld little of the galety and enjoyment which are quite as compatible with the performance of doties as with the assertion of rights.

DON'T JUDGE BY APPEARANCES.

Major Louergan's Error Which Cost Him a Bottle of "Medicine." Major Thomas E. Lonergan relates an adventure that proves how foolish it is to pin everything upon a man's exterior appearance, says the Chicago Post:

Not long ago Major Lonergan had occa-sion to make a trip through lowa, and to prevent any of the temperary disorders that the human anatomy is subject to in the way of cramps and chills, and to ward off any threatened malarial attack he took with him an eight-ounce bottle containing a combination drink in which John Bar-with him an eight-ounce bottle containing a combination drink in which John Barleycorn cut a very prominent figure.

The reader will bear in mind that the mixture was preparet purely and solely for medicinal purposes.

On the train the expected chill overtook the Major and he had to have recourse to his bottle or else make an ignominous surrender. He had taken the glass affair out of his valise and was about to absorb its contents when in the seat opposite him he noticed a very clerical-looking gentleman who appeared to Major Lonergan's gaze as a prohibition clergy man. He was so sure of the fact that he at once began to make profuse apologies for the appearance of the fact that he at once began to make profuse apologies for the appearance of the fact that he at once began to make profuse apologies for the appearance of the fact that he at once he gan to make a remark in a hearty way to the effect that—a—er—a—perhaps the gentleman would not object to taking a taste of a very delicious compound.

would not object to taking a taste of a very delicious compound.

As he said these words he courteously held out the bottle, expecting, of course, that the clerical looking passenger would kindly but firmly decline it with thanks. But the way that white-necktied individual jumped at that bottle with both hands was a caution. He grabbed it and hugged it to his bosom as if it had been a long-lost brother instead of a cocktail compound. Then holding it away from him so as to get the full benefit of its color, he smacked his lips, heaved a great sigh, opened his cavernous mouth and applied the bottle.

In one minute by Major Lenergan's watch there was not a drop left and the solemn-looking individual was profuse in his thanks when he handed the empty bottle back to its paralyzed owner. How the major cured his frightful attack of the cramps, or whether he cured the pain at all, can be learned upon application at his office on Monroe street.
